New Technology

Every American who is concerned about Global Warming has heard about new technologies that are being developed and that may help reduce greenhouse gas emissions. That presents us with questions such as:

Who decides which technologies are developed first?

Once proven, how quickly can technology be put into place?

What can be done to reduce the cost of new technology in order to get it into the hands of consumers?

Leadership Needed

Government plays a major leadership role in the process by funding research, providing market incentives to manufactures, and creating tax breaks for purchasers. If it has the will to find new technologies, those technologies will be found.

The Green Party will lead

The Green Party believes that if we choose leaders who are committed to reducing Global Warming, then government can cause solutions to be found. The Green Party Platform supports moving funding away from subsidies for the oil and nuclear industries and into subsidies for new energy technology development. We believe that the agencies of government must be redesigned to allow them to track new technology development, to suggest priorities, and to help the private sector coordinate their activities. Our candidates are committed to providing the leadership that is needed.

Support Green Candidates

Major party candidates run as individuals. Electing a candidate who says the things you want to hear about the environment doesn't mean that their party will support the same things. That lack of commitment by the major parties provides their candidates with an excuse for failure. You have probably heard something like this before, "I tried but the majority didn't support it".

Green Party Candidates support the Green Party Platform. The platform calls for Global Warming to be reduced. Electing Green Candidates is the only way to insure that our government will lead in the fight to reduce Global Warming.

Let the Green Party lead.
